

International LegalTech Competition

ALGORITHMS, ETHICS AND LAW

Through advanced AI/ML models, legal services will potentially change more drastically over the next decades than in the last centuries. Lawyers need to face not only an emerging possibility of using algorithms in law firms (to make their work easier and to increase the quality of their services), but also to tackle the consequences of AI for the proper functioning of the legal systems.

Many within the legal profession appreciate the opportunities which will arise from the use of advanced algorithms in the legal profession; however, on the other hand, many worry about the inadequacy of the current legal framework to challenges that AI creates. The European Bars Federation shares a trustworthy and ethical approach to AI, based on respecting fundamental rights and shared European values. The Competition aims to both enhance the use of secure AI/ML solutions in the legal sphere and support the efforts to effectively govern the functioning of advanced algorithms in contemporary society.

Dear Participants, your task in the Competition is to prepare a project that focuses on the use of AI and its impact on legal services, with particular emphasis on the practical (current or future) effects on the legal domain. Please keep in mind that your projects may present an already existing or underway technological solution or the legal implications of AI, as long as they affect (or will affect in the foreseeable future) the way legal services are provided.
